Intimate Partner Violence: Screening & Intervention for Health Professionals

Intimate Partner Violence is a preventable public health issue that affects millions of Americans according to the Center for Disease Control. Healthcare professionals can and should play a critical role in screening for and responding to this health issue. Most Americans trust their health provider and they come to see you because they want help. Healthcare settings are safe and nurturing - the perfect place to explore options and resources with victims.

INTIMATE PARTNER VIOLENCE IN CONNECTICUT

A PERVERSIVE PUBLIC HEALTH ISSUE

WHAT IS INTIMATE PARTNER VIOLENCE?

Intimate partner violence is a pattern of coercive, controlling behavior that can take many forms:

PHYSICAL - such as hitting, slapping, punching and shoving

VERBAL, EMOTIONAL, PSYCHOLOGICAL - such as public or private name calling or put-downs, exhibiting extreme jealousy, isolating the victim from seeing family or friends

SEXUAL - such as non-consensual sexual acts or violence, including between spouses

FINANCIAL - such as withholding money or giving "an allowance," forbidding the victim to work or sabotaging employment, running up debt in the victim's name

STALKING - such as following the victim or tracking the victim through GPS, sending unwanted messages or gifts

Victims are left feeling scared, confused, dependent and insecure about their ability to survive on their own, financially or otherwise. The children of an abused parent must contend with these same fears and realities.

EFFECTS ON PHYSICAL & MENTAL HEALTH

Being in a relationship with someone who is controlling and intimidating takes a toll physically and mentally on a person. The pressure of trying to make things work can become overwhelming and being under that level of stress on a regular basis is linked to a number of chronic and acute health problems.

2003 national cost estimates from the CDC place the direct costs of medical and mental health care for victims of intimate partner violence at $8.3 BILLION ANNUALLY.

BENEFITS OF SCREENING & EDUCATION

Screening and education increases provider and patient comfort around the topic of intimate partner violence. Regardless of the screening outcome, consistent education creates an environment where abuse can be safely disclosed and discussed. When disclosures occur, providers will know the resources available to clients. As victims' needs are addressed, patient safety and satisfaction can be positively impacted.
